The apportionment of the aggregate less not between different properties and assess of property, with reference to liens the same or indebtedness of owners, and still remain a matter of perhaps inprable difficulty. In point of fact, hower, it is matter of universal experience distorated that even the strictest interest in laws have failed to ascertain to reach for purposes of taxation the cable wealth of citizens, consisting of locks, bonds of individuals, corporates, and cities, capital in business. Ac. (Vide 'Taxation in America States and Cities,' by Richard T. y, chapters 4 to 8, inclusive.) The absonancessity of every State for revenue therefore, made it indispensable that to incipal burdens of direct taxation and be borne by tangible property, and and usually without deduction its assessed value.

"It has, however, been suggested by some that where land is mortgaged at least the amount of the debt can always be as-erlained, and the tax on the mortgage imposed and collected; and that such be-ing the case, justice requires and the inte-rests of the State permit that the tax on the land should to that extent be abated.

THE INTERESTS OF THE STATE. As above remarked, it is not clear that As above remarked, it is not clear that the substice in any case requires that the amount of the mortgaged debt any more than any other debt due by an owner of land should be deducted in ascertaining taxable values. Fut waiving the question of justice between debtors whose obligations are secured by mortgage on their land, and those whose obligations, though equally burdensome, are unsecured, it remains to inquire whether the interests of the Statewill permit even the mortgage debt to be deducted from the taxable value of land. That the State may without injury permit this deduction of course implies that she may tax the debt which is deducted; and here arises a practical difficulty which seems absolutely insuperable—that is, that the State cannot tax bonds or other debts which belong to non-residents, even though such bonds or other debts be secured by mortgage on lands within the limits of the State. (Vide case of State tax on foreign-held bonds, 15 Wall., page 300.)

Minister on This Subject.

The House Committee on Immigration had a meeting yesterday afternoon to hear an address from Rev. Mr. Hurlbert, a Baptist minister of Ohio.

This gentleman, with a number of other people of the Buckeye State, has just closed a contract for 4,000 acres of land in Prince George county, and will soon establish a colony there.

Mr. Hurlbert thought the movement inaugurated by the State Board of Agriculture of Virginia in behalf of immigration the best that could have been adopted.

Last year, he said, Judge Grattan, the State Immigration Agent, and Mr. George Williams, agent of the State Board for Prince George county, came out to Ohio and interested the people of his section in the idea of coming to Virginia, and the result is this colony was organized, and many more people are thinking of coming here to buy land.

Mr. Hurlburt said it was a great thing for Virginia to send out her own authorized agents, as the people of his State have been so much imposed upon by private land-agents that they now had very little faith in them. The system of the State Board of Agriculture he thought a slow one, but in the end it is certain to bring good results.

Salvini is unquestionably the greatest Othello of this day, and his Othello is his greatest character. His Othello is a yel-low-skinned Moor, luxuriant of gesture and expression brave as alion, yet timid as greatest character. His Othello is a yellow-skinned Moor, invariant of gesture and expression, brave as alion, yet timid as a friend to admire—in short a type of the grand race that built the Alhambra and gave to Southern Europe much exoquisite literature. As Othello the great Italian displays a tragic quickness and grasp, an intensity and force of expression, that mark the presence of great genius. The earnestness with which each syllable is uttered impress those who listen with the belief that, for the time, he is Othello.

In the speech to the Doge, the rebuke of Cassio, and the death-scene, he developed all the majesty of the character. While in the scene with Iago, where jealousy is awakened, and the last scenes with Desdemona and Emila, his dramatic and pathetic voicing affected the listeners to tears. He gives a complete, a perfect Othello; a masterful, a faithful depicture of "one that lov'd not wisely, but too well."

Signor Salvini speaks his lines in the Italian language. But even this cannot obscure his genius to the most ignorant, and to those familiar with the play is a matter of small moment. His intonation, his expression, his gesticulation, are so indicative of the text that his speaking in a foreign tongue is in a manner lost sight of.

Signor Salvini is supported by an excellent company. Mr. Malone as Iago, Miss Brooklyn as Desdemona, and Mr. Henderson as Cassio delineated their respective rôtes admirably.

The revival at the West-End Baptist church is still in progress, and great interest is evinced. Last night Dr. Goodwin preached, and five persons professed conversion and eleven requested the prayers of the church. There will be preaching again to-night.

Two Painful Accidents.

While a vessel was being unloaded yesterday morning at a wharf near the Richmond Cedar-Works one of the white men so engaged had one of his legs painfully injured by a barrel of coal-oil rolling over it. The city ambulance was summoned and the physician in charge found the man's limb badly bruised but no bones broken. He was taken to the Retreat for the Sick for treatment.

At five minutes after 1 in the afternoon the ambulance was called to Johnson's foundry, under the Free bridge, where one of the operatives had gotten his thumb hung in some way and had the nail nearly pulled off. The doctor cut the nail entirely off, dressed the hand, and the injured man went home.

The play was Othello, and of all of the ping at the American Hotel. thirty-six plays of the great Bard of Avon there is no one that is more powerful than work sparkles with incisive and powerful engrams.

The two great characters of the play, Othello and lago, are contrasted in a way that marks the hand of the master. So powerfully is each character drawn that Shakspearian critics have never been able to determine which is the stronger part, and that great actors are also divided in opinion as to their merits is evident from the fact that of the two colossi of the modern stage one (Edwin Booth) plays lago, the other (Tomaso Salvini), plays Othelio.
